AUTUMN HARVEST

Cultures + Generations + Hearts + Connected

Autumnal arrays of color and flavor open the door to new experiences. Gathering, remembering, learning and celebrating together look quite different when the night wraps its cloak around our camps, tree plantings and medicine-making earlier in the day. We gathered closer in the darkness to share laughter over tea brewed from the last fresh herbs harvested before the frost settled upon the land. Trees were accounted for, noting continued growth from the time of planting in years past, and a new generation of children planted trees before the ground became too frozen. Profound movements across cultures, nations and generations changed our lives. We are grateful for all there is to share of this season.

RECOGNIZING THE LAND AND ALL OF ITS LIFE ARE SACRED

COLLABORATIVE INTENTION

At the autumnal Roots, Plants and Arts Camp, young people worked together to prepare crate gardens for Casa Freehold, a local non-government immigrant rights advocacy organization that fights for the rights of immigrants and refugees. This is the kind of inspiration and focus we instill in young minds and kindle in their hearts to carry forward with presence, care and attention to what matters in life. Relationships and community service are at the heart of all we are involved with.

Working toward common goals with our partners, volunteers and participants has helped to generate more and more awareness and participation in our various programs and projects. Autumn brought us a powerful fulfillment of our mission to preserve traditional and indigenous knowledge, and to provide access to education through wellness, mindfulness, nature experiences and hands-on environmental conservation projects.

"Thank you for all you do and for showing that such important things can be done with ease, grace, and lots of laughter."

ELA NANT, COMMUNITY MEMBER

NOTE FROM THE EDITOR

It is humbling to be called to service and, by even a small offering, support many life-changing projects and experiences. The positive butterfly effect of these programs and partnerships drives me to collaborate with Antinanco. It is inspiring to witness people work together, model the ability to respond and meet needs with actions that align with our harmonious interrelationship. People's lives are changed and nature thrives. Thank you, Antinanco and friends!

As Antinanco celebrates its seventh anniversary this year, our operations continue to develop programs and partnerships that support the growth of life through earth-based education for children, indigenous social action, environmental conversation and the support of indigenous causes. Community service to preserve the ways of living in harmonious relationship with the earth is the purpose of our growing synergistic alliances.

As we near the end of the year and review the first three quarters, we gather the harvest of our efforts and recognize the areas of our growth.

Our partners, friends and community have helped Antinanco to evolve over the past several years. This autumn, we came together again to raise awareness, plant trees, teach children, and bring running water to more families.

Along with our progress, we are necessarily escalating our operations, adding staff and support services.

The results have been great, fostering a sense of family expansion while many hands made light work of important matters. Now, let's have a closer look at our Autumn yield.

CHESTNUT IMPACT REPORT

The American Chestnut Revival Project in its Fifth Year is Growing Like Rings in a Tree

The result of saying yes to planting Chestnut trees with children, an idea proposed by Antinanco’s Director of Green Initiatives and Plant-Human Connections, Joseph Arnold Resch, will effect change in the world for years to come. Participants are reporting they now have a deeper connection with the natural world, an appreciation of the diminished species and a dedication to environmental stewardship. This is our mission and intent so we are delighted to receive this feedback and confirmation from the work we are doing.

Our records show that from 2018-2022 700+ participants attended tree plantings, 214 chestnut trees were planted along with 900+ native plants and 6 partner planting sites have been established. 600+ children received educational instruction and lesson plans, 2500+ children accessed resources virtually and 40+ successful community workshops have been held during the life of this project!

We are grateful fundraising and program initiatives continue to develop and support the reach of this conservation project.

This Autumn two years ago our AMERICAN CHESTNUT TREE CONSERVATION FIELD COURSE: Manual for Forest Ecology and Conservation of the North-East United States was published. It is available for purchase through many book sellers.

THE TO'H NI'LI PROJECT

A Joint Collaboration Among Accomplis, Antinanco, CVE North America, K'eh Native Action, Forgotten People, Native American Emergency Relief and Sinmuy Amungem

This Autumn our friends and partners continued to bring pressurized running water to families in the Navajo and Hopi Nations. We mourn the passing of Andrew Qumyintewa, founder of the all-volunteer grassroots Sinmuy Amungem - For The People, whose dedication to his communities brought more solar powered water pumps to residents without electricity or running water.

In September, K'e Native Action team presented the Water Is Flowing project in front of the Navajo Nation's Houck Chapter CLUPC Community Land Use Planning Committee. It makes us happy that more and more members, including young people, from the Dine'h and Hopi communities are joining this effort, learning about solar energy, and getting involved in applying these solutions to strengthen their communities' self-sufficiency and sovereignty.

When we originally designed the first Water is Flowing unit prototype at Antinanco, our vision was to not only provide a reliable and self-contained solution that can bring running water to the households in need, but to also gradually transfer the ownership of the project to the communities themselves. We are happy that our vision is now coming to life.

To'h Ni'li' - Water is Flowing Project

Fundraising supports ongoing programs like our To'h Ni'Li' - Water is Flowing project by providing the resources, materials and means, to enable our volunteers and partners to meet the needs of the people.

Clean running water is helping the most vulnerable populations affected by water-washed infections like COVID-19. Read more about this at antinanco.org/waterisflowing and #waterisflowing

INDIGENOUS PEOPLES' DAY BROOKLYN BRIDGE PRAYER WALK

Honoring Turtle Island Indigenous Peoples as Original Stewards of the Land On Which We Now Live

The second annual Brooklyn Bridge prayer walk to raise awareness for Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Children brought people of all ages and cultures together. There are prophecies that foresaw this moment. Our prayer walk met with the Ramapo Nation's parade with an activating sensation in celebration of bridging the rainbow to heal the earth.

Stirring moments in ceremony were encapsulated by friends and photographer Adrian L. Childress. We walked in prayer together on this sacred land, across life-giving waters, to honor life, remember those whose voices were silenced, and come together to hear the indigenous call to follow native women into the future.

Plans are already in motion for 2023, expanding upon this collaboration with the Ramapo Nation, for the third annual Indigenous Peoples' Day Brooklyn Bridge Prayer Walk.

BBPW 2022 was featured in the media and in our blog. Read the articles and learn more about this evolving event at antinanco.org/indigenouspeoplesday.

We involve children, families and youth groups in New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania in environmental stewardship, educating about the effect of our actions on the environment, and providing resources and solutions to maintain the integrity of the Northeastern ecosystems.
